What do you think happened here? What backstory comes with these jeans?

Wednesday, April 10, 2013

I watch Elementary and CSI so I wonder how this might have come about.

When out running or walking, I often come across discarded or lost stuff. Usually it's just cigarette butts or beer cans or some loose change. Occasionally I'll find a sock or a cap.

A few yards further and this shoe was right in the middle of the lane

Its mate was visible by the side of the road in the distance.

I once found a bra in a parking lot early in the morning and figured that I knew what kind of late night activity had produced that. But how do you lose clothes in the middle of the road?

Maybe someone was carrying a bag of donations and these fell out? But we're miles away from any donation center.

Perhaps they were in the back of a pickup truck and the wind blew them away? Can wind be that strong?

Was someone mad at a boyfriend and was tossing his stuff out the window? I saw that once on "Judge Judy" but it was electronics not clothes.

Anyone have any ideas or care to share anything strange you have come upon?

I have a friend who makes "Found Art". They are some of the most amazing pieces of art! I run in the country, so I find lots of car bumpers, beer cans, running boards, tires, and feed sacks-nothing too out of the ordinary for around here. The strangest thing I found was a full loaf of bread, only because it was in the wrapper and looked perfectly fine--Lily my canine, running companion took it upon herself to bring it home as a souvenir and snack on it throughout the rest of the week.

٧ I like the Rapture idea. Having seen this kind of stuff too, I feel it's more likely to be some randy person getting hyped up for some reason or other -drunk, sex, ticked off! But I don't see how a responsible person in their right mind would throw out perfectly good jeans & a pair of shoes. Oh well we can ponder and wonder and create our own story, because I doubt we'll learn the real

I used to walk my dog around a 3-mile loop with a neighbor. Within the span of about two weeks, my dog found a whole cooked turkey in its pan in an empty field behind a church, an entire cooked steak on the sidewalk in front of DQ, and a serving bowl full of spaghetti in the middle of a busy street. He was annoyed because I wouldn't let him eat any of it. I'm thinking the spaghetti was forgotten after they put it on the car roof to open the car door and just drove off, but the other two items still have me wondering.

Good questions! I like the idea that they were donating the clothes and they feel out of the vehicle. And, finding two shoes instead of one, is very unique. Hhhmmmmm! 2987 days ago

Haha. Weird is all I can say. If the pants were first, how did he take them off while still wearing

My first thought is spontaneous combustion but there are no singe marks.

I watch Being Human, so it could have been a vampire that got staked and went into dust.... or a werewolf - they strip down to nothing so they have clothes ready when they morph back to human form....

Remember the CSI episode (or was it NCIS?) where teenagers got hold of some drug (E?) that caused their body temp to soar? There was a trail of clothes from one who ran, stripping off his garments, till he collapsed. I'm guessing that's not what happened here, but who knows? 2987 days ago

Too bad we can't hire Sherlock and Watson to solve these mysteries. It seems strange to find items in the middle of the road. At least you can enjoy your runs while trying to figure out how
