It's officially springtime in VA

Sunday, April 07, 2013

So when I take a photo from my deck at this time of year, the white stuff floating around is usually pollen. Since the fruit trees are in bloom, the pollen count has been rising, but that's not what this is.

On Friday I thought the wind was blowing some blossoms off trees like this.

Until I looked at my deck.

I know that's not a LOT of snow, but we're not in New England.
This is April in Virginia!

When our Easter egg hunt was cancelled 2 weeks ago because it was snowing, I dismissed it. After all, it was still March. That had to be winter's last hurrah, right?

Springtime in VA

I was WRONG.

Today it's supposed to be 72° so DH and I are going canoeing this afternoon.

I hope this is the end of the freaky weather, FINALLY!

Pretty much same here except I'm about 30 miles south of Lake Ontario so we expect lots of snow. Interesting weather this winter but we barely got even our average snowfall. It landed elsewhere. Fun to watch and try to out-guess Mother Nature :-)

I was a loooooong cold, windy unpredictable winter for us here in PA. Although the temps have been rising, this wind won't let up; so irritating!

Here's to hoping we enjoy some springlike weather and don't get thrust-ed right into heat and humidity! Pat

I hope it is the end of freaky weather for you as well. Have fun canoeing. My son is moving to Fairfax this summer from SC. He may not be ready for snow in April!
