You can't find a lumberjack when you need one, so you have to improvise.

Tuesday, July 02, 2013

This huge tree trunk was floating by our house, a casualty of the last storm. Since it would be a definite hazard to boats, we lassoed it and dragged it into shore.

Now what? Fortunately, we have engineers in the family, and 2 who do serious weight training (not DH).

So after wrapping the cable around a few trees they managed this.

The plan now is to let it dry out so it will weigh less, cut it up and get it out of there.

Last week I posted the damage to our neighbors dock.

I don't know if our "floater" caused damage when it came down, but leaving it out in the water could result in tragedy even after the storm was over.

Enjoy nature, but keep your eyes open and be aware of your surroundings on land and in the water.

Well done! They're especially dangerous when they float just below the surface so they can't be seen until right on them. This happens a lot here in the spring on the Columbia river.

You have a beautiful place to live! Is it fresh or salt water? My husband would love living that close to water!

Good job on dragging that giant tree out and removing a hazard. Great family coordination in that tree operation. Who needs a lumberjack?

If it were bigger, you could rig it for some log jogging...LOL!

Good job on taking care of others.

That is indeed a lovely place to live. Have a great day!
