Does this mean I'm a perfect 10?

Saturday, April 19, 2014

All the other race numbers this morning were 100-300.

What did I do to deserve this?

I know that elite runners are given special low numbers. That sure is NOT me.

Maybe I registered early and was the only early registrant who actually showed up?
No, there were 62 on the list when I registered.

Maybe although this was a 5K, someone knew I would wear an old shirt and thought the 10s should match?

Maybe they had one bib left over from another race and didn't want to waste it?
Now, that's a possibility.

Maybe as the oldest woman in the race by a lot, it was a signal to the EMT's to watch out for me?
The route did require us to run uphill all the way to this:

The National D-Day Memorial is on a hill overlooking the town of Bedford, VA which lost more men per capita on the Normandy beaches (June 6, 1944) than any other locality in the USA.

I had plenty of time to think about their sacrifice.
All I had to do this morning was show up and run/walk up and around the monument and back down.

As the only 60+ woman participating, I got a medal anyway.

You number was 10 as in "perfect 10" for being the cutest entrant. Someone was trying to flirt with you.

The medal reminds me of a line of products we girls of Brooklyn in the '50's clamored for: Ponytail. I had a Ponytail pencil case and Ponytail diaries.

I would have guessed without knowing the facts that you had registered late, because in my experience the late registrants are the ones who get out of sequence numbers. But, having read the blog, I know that's not the case. Strange...

In any event, congratulations!

Congrats on your age group "win". Funny how the competition "thins out" at our age.
