Remember the movie “The Invasion of the Body Snatchers?”

Friday, October 31, 2014

This is one scary vegetable to appear on Halloween. It triggered a memory of the “pod people” from the 1950s version of the movie that freaked me out as a kid.

DH picked the last of our squash and found this thing.

He doesn't remember planting it. He found 2 smaller ones also so I can't blame some wayward bird for dropping a seed.

We didn't find anything similar in the seed catalog so I have no idea what to do with it. For now it will just sit on my kitchen counter – my Halloween mystery.

So, did you cut it open? Give it a taste? Perhaps you have a melon cross, and it could be delicious!

I don't think any blank human forms will come oozing out, waiting to take on your features and memories.

I just watched "Invasion of the Body Snatchers" for the first time a few days ago, the 1956 version. Still remember those pods!

Wow, I wouldn't know what to do with it either! Amazing how scared we were of the movies back then and now look at what kids are watching! Ours paled compared to the graphic pictures now days. So glad I don't watch them.

It may be a "Cucurbita-pepo - Gem Squash." As someone else said it may have been searching for water, therefore the funny looking hairy stuff on the outside. How did it taste?

I really don't know, unless it is a deformed melon or over grown gourd. I remember my DH watching that movie as a repeat-I didn't like it. I don't do Steven King or scary movies of any sort. As Erik would say "not my style". Hope you have a happy halloween.

Weird! Is it some kind of melon, or a squash?
