Oops, my bedsheets tell the tale this morning

Sunday, December 27, 2015

Nothing kinky or gross, just a light sprinkling of red and green sugar.

A house-full of company always means readjusting some sleeping arrangements, especially with 5 grandsons and 1 grand-daughter. Since she was little, we would send Grandpa to a "snore room" and she would move in with me where we would watch kids' TV until she fell asleep. We have a king-size bed that she liked too.

A few years ago she took a cake decorating class and got really good at it. She just turned 14. Now I pre-record Food Channel baking shows for her. They don't have cable at their house.

Last night we were watching "Cake Wars" - the holiday finale series. Around midnight we both suddenly got really hungry, so we crept downstairs like burglars and grabbed some cookies to eat while watching TV.

We had a plate, but this morning the evidence of the deed is clear. Oh well, I was going to wash the sheets anyway.

A side note: Those iced sugar cookies are truly the best ones ever! That's why I never make them anymore. I could eat a dozen all by myself and if I took the time and effort to bake them, that's exactly what I would do. DD brought these and I restrained myself all evening so others could have them, but now they are all gone. Only the sugar residue remains.

Too funny. I get it, I have my younger granddaughter sleep in my bed to keep her from jumping on her cousin and sister. Well at least you have clean sheets for the New Year.

Charming! Creating memories for a beloved grandchild is priceless. One that she will grow to remember and appreciate many years from now.

Thanks, as always, for posting your priceless stories.

Leftover treats are now gone from my house, although I have to confess they went by way of the body... sigh. But there is a natural stopping point with the discard of the leftover ingredients!

Now, back to business, right? We love to run. We can't outrun eating junk, nor does sugar work well as fuel! Savor the memory, but Spark on, my friend!

LOL - what a wonderful grandma you are! I'm sure she'll treasure these memories - and yeah, cookies tend to call my name too.

Hilarious and very very sweet!!

And: I'm with you about snacks (planned and healthy) between meals. There's stuff to learn from Beck, from Bright Line, and from so many other sources. But at the end of the day, each of us is an experiment of one.

We figure it out. Over and over! What works for ME is what I've gotta do!!

Loved your story!

This was a smart way to enjoy the cookies to the fullest, with your granddaughter, without risk of overeating.
