“God Willing and the Creek Don’t Rise”

*Saturday, May 23, 2020Voted Featured Blog Post

That's a saying I remember from my childhood.

In addition to current problems, our “creek,” that is our lake and river have been rising to levels not seen in decades. Our dock is underwater.

This picture of DH was taken 2 days ago when he moved our kayaks off the dock and onto the shoreline. Yesterday the water was at mid thigh level.

Our house isn't in any danger. There are 100 steps from the dock to the house. I always said if we were not physically able to navigate those 100 steps, it would be time for us to move to town.

Fortunately, the rain stopped and little is predicted for the next 5 days.
The water level is falling ever so slowly (.04 feet per hour)

Note: While the phrase in my blog title appears to be a simple prayer for heavenly support and a lack of floods, historically it referred to the Creek Nation of Native Americans.

Amazing what you learn when you have a lot of time on your hands.
Stay safe, stay well.

So, the phrase is against the Creek?
That's why the Great Sprit is sending so much aweewah, water. In Creek.

But, it may not be...

You are 'underwater' and Las Vegas is under a heat advisory and we have to worry about the lack of rain. The weather is certainly unpredictable. Stay safe.

We are expecting big flood once the North thaws out and feeds the Mississippi down south, and all the rain we have had all spring, I think we will experience flooding soon. Glad you are safe!

We have had some major rainfall lately; tonight was a tornado warning and flash flood warning. But our house is on enough of a little hill that it has never yet flooded, and I don't think it will. Right back at you to stay safe and well.

So glad your house ok and not in any danger of flooding. My niece who lives in Midland, Michigan was also lucky and their home was spared, when in their area 2 dams broke and devastated the area. A 2300 acre lake drained in less than an hour, which is unheard of. Property and homes were washed away, and others just flooded completely. That area won't be the same for quite a while. One good thing, no lives were lost, because we have had too many here from the virus.

Take care and be safe.

JUNEPA

according to wikipedia

The expression "...the creek don't rise" is an American slang expression implying strong intentions subject to complete frustration by uncommon but not unforeseeable events. It presumably evokes occasional and unpredictably extreme rainfall in Appalachia, that has historically isolated one rural neighborhood or another temporarily inaccessible on several or many occasions. It is sometimes thought that the word "Creek" instead refers to the Creek people, but this is not the case
